NARRATIVE DESCRIPTION

The Kinsley Civil War Monument (1917) is located at the center of the 32.5 acre Hillside Cemetery northwest of Kinsley, Kansas. The monument is situated between two "soldiers' plots" that are both thirty feet square. It is thought that this location was chosen for the monument as a way to honor the buried soldiers and embellish their plots. This concrete multi-figure monument features a large square base with bas-reliefs that supports a central shaft with four military figures surrounding. It is topped by a "Winged Victory", which is typical of the allegorical figures often placed atop multi-figure monuments.

Archeologist Randall M. Thies published an article in Kansas History in 1999 about the Kinsley monument, its method of construction, and its creator. In "Civil War Valor in Concrete: David A. Lester and the Kinsley Civil War Monument," Thies suggests the monument was created in much the same fashion as Samuel A. Dinsmoor's famous Garden of Eden in Lucas, Kansas. "Cement can be used to make sculpture through two basic methods, and apparently both were applied in constructing the Kinsley monument. One method is hand molding, in which wet cement mix is applied by hand to a framework made of metal rod, wire, or wire mesh. The other method involves the creation of cast concrete object by pouring cement mix into a hollow sculpture that serves as a rigid exterior form. Metal reinforcing rod also can be fixed in place within the form to strengthen the sculpture."<sup>1</sup>

The basic structure is concrete with the overall dimension being 10' x 10' x 25' high. The base measures 8 ½ feet square by 7 feet high. On each side of the base there is a depiction in relief of servicemen in action: a cavalry scene on the west face, a group of infantrymen on the south, an artillery scene on the east, and a naval vessel (perhaps the well-known Monitor) is shown on the north face. At each of the four corners of the base there is a standing figure: an infantryman, a sailor, an artilleryman, and a cavalryman. The "Winged Victory" sitting atop the central shaft faces north toward the majority of soldiers buried nearby rather than south toward the cemetery entrance, which would seem more logical to visitors.

There is a cinder core in the base with a concrete substructure over the cinder. The concrete "skin" is  $\frac{1}{2}$  to  $\frac{3}{4}$  inch thick. Many layers of waterproof paint have been applied to the relief panels on the base in an effort to protect the monument from weather. This has negatively impacted the panels as it has diminished the depth of relief. Fired clay bricks were used in the dentil courses and decorative vertical banding.

Condition

The historic photograph above (see Fig. 1) shows the monument shortly after its construction in 1917. The photo provides a glimpse of the monument in its original condition. It shows the detailing in the base panels and the completeness of the accoutrements on the four military figures. The infantry figure is missing its rifle, left hand, and possibly the scabbard and bayonet. The cavalry figure has damage to the brim of his cap and some minor chipping, while the sailor has damage to his face and cap. The cap of the artillery figure is also damaged, while his right forearm and cannon swab are missing. Fortunately, there appears to be little damage to the "Winged Victory" figure or the column, which she surmounts.

Some cracks have developed at the corners of the base and there are obvious patches throughout the monument. As previously mentioned, the layers of paint have affected the monument – especially the base panels. Restoration and stabilization of the monument is highly desirable.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Kinsley Civil War Monument (1917) is being nominated to the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion C for artistic significance as a handmade vernacular memorial made of concrete. Local craftsman and Civil War veteran David A. Lester created this memorial to Civil War veterans in 1917. This sculpture is one of only three known multi-figure Civil War monuments in Kansas. The others are the Sedgwick County Soldiers and Sailors Monument (1913) in Wichita and the Soldiers and Sailors Monument (1918) in Hutchinson. Both are listed in the National Register of Historic Places. Large multi-figure Civil War monuments like these are most often made of stone, and, because of the cost to build them, are generally found in more prosperous metropolitan areas. With no known formal art training, Lester's creation made of cement is truly vernacular and unique.

Historic Context

Settlers from Massachusetts founded Kinsley (population 1,658) in 1873, naming it in honor of E. W. Kinsley of Boston, who built the first church edifice. Kinsley is the county seat of Edwards County, Kansas. Despite a decade of crop failure and disease, the town grew with the hopes of becoming a large city. The town was located at the junction of two lines of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe railroad. Local newspapers called Kinsley "the boomingest boom town in the Southwest." As Eastern capital was invested into Kansas, "townsites broke out all over the face of Kansas like the measles," one historian wrote. The bubble burst, however, in 1888, and Kinsley "settled down to more productive pursuits." Its population in 1910 was 1,547.<sup>2</sup>

During this period of growth and development in Kinsley, a group of 16 Union veterans organized a local chapter of the Grand Army of the Republic – Timothy O. Howe Post 241 – in 1883. The membership climbed to 27 by 1894.<sup>3</sup> The nation's first GAR group formed in April 1866 in Decatur, Illinois, and the first national gathering of GAR members took place later that year in Indianapolis. Soon, the organization became the "main agency through which Union veterans expressed their needs and demands, and the order quickly surpassed other veterans associations such as the Veterans Corps and the Soldiers and Sailors' National Union League in both membership and influence."<sup>4</sup> In addition to political involvement and charity work, "the central activity that dominated the early GAR was the observance of Memorial Day."<sup>5</sup>

Monuments to past heroes were nothing new in post-Civil War America. However, never before had monuments been erected to military heroes on such a broad scale. The years between 1870 and 1910 "comprised the most notable period in U.S. history for monuments in honor of 'mighty warriors and unsung heroes' and spread a sort of contagion as plaques and other memory aids became vogue."<sup>6</sup> This type of public memorialization continued through the years after World War I.

Of the many types of Civil War monuments, the most elaborate, expensive, and ostentatious are the multi-figured sculptures. Other monument types, such as obelisks, single military statues, armaments, and funerary ornaments are relatively common throughout Kansas.<sup>7</sup> Of the multi-figured monuments, only three remain in Kansas – the Wichita monument (1913), the Kinsley monument (1917), and the Hutchinson monument (1918). All of these monuments share a common form. An allegorical statue such as Liberty or Victory sits atop a single column or shaft overlooking four lower statues representing military figures. All of this rests on a large base for support.

Monuments were erected in communities all around Kinsley during this same time: Jetmore in 1913, Dodge City in 1914, and Great Bend in 1915. Plans for a memorial were underway in Larned in 1916.

It is particularly unique to have such an elaborate monument in a community as small as Kinsley. Because of the cost, such sizable and complex structures are normally associated with larger, more prosperous towns. It is a tribute to Lester, a resident of Kinsley, who envisioned such a monument for his community and brought the project to fruition.

Another unique feature of the Kinsley Civil War Monument is that it was entirely hand built. Lester alone designed and executed the monument in 1917 at the age of 74. Two things made this formidable monument a possibility for a small, rural community like Kinsley. First, Lester selected the most common, inexpensive and utilitarian materials – namely concrete. Second, Lester did the work himself fashioning the entire monument with whatever tools were available and with his hands.

Built for a cost of $1,100, the monument was officially unveiled in May 1917 on Memorial Day. As the commander of the local chapter of the Grand Army of the Republic (GAR), a national veterans organization, Lester read the memorial service with 17 other veterans in attendance.<sup>8</sup> Kinsley newspapers <sup>7</sup> Many historic sculptures and monuments in Kansas have been documented through the Kansas Save Outdoor Sculpture! (SOS!) project during the late 1990s. The Kansas State Historical Society sponsored the documentation project as part of a national effort to inventory and promote the preservation of public outdoor sculpture. The Kansas SOS! files consist of field survey reports and associated historical documentation, such as newspaper clippings, gathered by project coordinator Randall Thies and other volunteers. This study provides a clearer understanding of the historical context in which to place the Kinsley Civil War monument.

praised the new monument and memorial service, calling it a “very fitting commemoration to the old soldiers both living and dead,” and that “every county in Kansas should do as we have done, even at this late day.”<sup>9</sup>

Not a great deal is known about Lester’s personal life, educational background, or artistic experience. His military pension records provide the best source of information about him prior to his arrival in Kansas. He was born in 1843 near Schenectady, New York. He was a private in the 27th New York Volunteer Infantry during the Civil War and was mustered out of the Army in 1863. He married Eulalia A. Crannell in 1873 and a son, Clarence, was born to the couple in 1877. In March of 1878, the family moved to the area of Kinsley, Kansas.<sup>10</sup>

According to Thies, Kinsley newspapers suggest that Lester’s early professional activities included sign painting and house painting. “He advertised that his abilities as a painter, paper-hanger, and decorator could make your home into ‘a veritable Monte Christo palace.’” One of his first big projects apparently was on a new bank building in 1885. Later Lester took an interest in photography, and even listed it as his occupation in the 1895 census.<sup>11</sup>

Summary

The Kinsley Civil War monument is eligible under Criterion C for its artistic significance as a handmade “grassroots” memorial sculpture made of concrete. Produced by a local craftsman and Civil War veteran, the monument is one of only three known multi-figure Civil War monuments in Kansas. It fits within the greater national trends of memorialization in that it is dedicated to the “common soldier and sailor” rather than military generals or political leaders.
