NARRATIVE DESCRIPTION

The Burr Oak United Methodist Church (1912) is located on the northeast corner of Pennsylvania and Washington Streets in Burr Oak, Jewell County, Kansas. It is two blocks east of the main street in the town. The two-story, red brick, hipped roof structure stands on an above-grade limestone foundation.

The church is an example of the Richardson Romanesque style. This is a style that was predominately utilized for public buildings from the 1880s to the early 1900s in Kansas. The style had become a symbol of the transforming landscape, prosperity, confidence, and the desire of a sophisticated metropolitan appearance. The church is unique in its execution of the Romanesque style, particularly with its pyramid roofs on the two tower structures, and its exquisite brickwork and stained glass windows. Its usage of limestone in the foundation is a testament to the local building materials. These elements, however, exhibit a straightforward and simple interpretation of style that the western landscape accentuates. The building clearly takes the basic components drawn from the Richardson Romanesque tradition. The structure's rounded arches over the windows and doors, masonry walls, asymmetrical façade, recessed windows, gabled dormers, and the use of towers are all defining Richardson Romanesque features.

Exterior

Overall- The Burr Oak United Methodist Church is a two-story limestone and red brick structure with a full basement. The limestone is rough-faced with squared stonework. The church has two dominant sides that face Pennsylvania and Washington Streets. The south side, which faces Pennsylvania Street, features a secondary entrance. The west side of the building, which faces Pennsylvania Street, includes the classroom wing. The low-pitched structure contains a main hipped roof, with smaller pyramidal-shaped roofs atop two towers and a classroom wing. The main tower also includes four gabled dormers. There are also two main gabled bays. The roof is covered with asphalt shingles.

Both of the main gable bays feature a prominent arched stained glass window set into a wood frame and topped by a decorative brick arch. The gable bays are flanked by two 1/1 double hung wood windows with transoms that are crowned with decorative arched brickwork. Finials accent the peaks of the gable façade. The building features cast stone accents on the windowsills, the tower, and stone coping.

The dominant three-story tower at the building's southwest corner serves as the main entrance to the sanctuary. This tower, which includes a bell that is no longer in use, has identical south and west elevations. The south entrance opening, however, has been filled with glass block.

The building contains 25 stained glass windows. Surrounding the windows are the wide, rounded arches that stand as key identifying features of the style. The arch springs that surround the stained glass windows provide the building definition and compliment the Romanesque design.

Interior-

Originally, there were two main entrances to the building. The west entrance, which faces Pennsylvania Street, retains its function. The other entrance on the south side of the building, facing Washington Street, has been filled with glass blocks. The church has three main public spaces within the building, which include the sanctuary, the original classroom space, and the basement.

There are many historic elements in the sanctuary. This includes the stained glass windows, pews, wooden trim, and light fixtures. Inside of the sanctuary there were four secondary stained glass windows and two primary stained glass windows. The subjects within the windows are: "Christ in the Garden," "Christ the Teacher," and the "Garden Angel." The sanctuary provides seating for about 225 people. The historic wooden pews are slightly rounded and face toward the eastern side of the building. There are sixteen pews in total, and they are oriented around a central aisle. The raised stage on which the pulpit stands is slightly higher than the floor on which the pews sit. This gives an impression that the floor is on a slight downward slope. In a renovation done to the church in the 1950s, the original stage was removed to provide more space for the altar.

The classroom wing, on the north half of the building, also served as an overflow space next to the sanctuary. An accordion style partition wall separates the two spaces. This classroom space has since been converted to more of a multi-use room. Adjacent to the classroom is the old pastor's study. An elevator was installed in this space in 1998 and provides access to the basement.

There are two outside entrances that lead to the multi-purpose basement: one at the building's northwest corner and the other at the southeast corner. There are six rooms within the basement of the church, which include the furnace room, the bathroom, the kitchen, a large multi-purpose room, and two classrooms. The elevator is accessed in one of the classrooms.

Most of the changes to the building have taken place in the basement. The basement walls are covered with wood paneling. Other changes include the installation and updating of the kitchen and bathroom, and the coal furnace has become a gas furnace.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Burr Oak United Methodist Church (1912) is being nominated to the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion C as a late Victorian example of Richardson Romanesque architecture in a small Kansas town. The Richardsonian Romanesque style of the church, which was the dominant style for public buildings in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, demonstrates the practice of applying it to regional materials and practices.¹ J.C. Holland, the architect of the church, gained prominence in the Midwest by popularizing the style while incorporating materials of the region into his structures. This is demonstrated by his use of limestone in the construction of the church. The design of the Burr Oak United Methodist Church is significant because it illustrates how midwestern architects were able to regionalize the concepts of Richardson's work to supplement the local culture.

History

Burr Oak, which was founded in 1870, is one of the principal towns in Jewell County, Kansas. It is located in the Burr Oak Township eleven miles northwest of Mankato, the county seat. The town is situated on White Rock Creek and connected the Missouri Pacific Railroad. A. J. Godfrey designed and established the layout of the town in 1871.² There were four religious dominations in Burr Oak during its formative years - Baptist, Methodist, Dunkard Brethren, and Catholic.³ The Methodists, however, were the first to establish a congregation in Burr Oak.

The Burr Oak United Methodist Church was first organized by Reverend Breed in 1873 to fulfill the need for a community church. Until 1880, meetings were held in various homes and buildings. In April of 1880, trustees were appointed to start plans for building a church.⁴ In 1881, the town contributed enough money to provide for the First Methodist Episcopal Church. The location chosen was at the northeast corner of Pennsylvania and Washington Streets. The lot was purchased and a foundation was laid for a 30' by 50' wooden frame building. A vestibule and steeple were added to the church after its construction. The building would be the town's first religious building.

Early in the twentieth century, the congregation outgrew the white frame church, and members decided they needed a larger structure. A new building, which had been under consideration for several years, was decided upon on December 4, 1911.⁵ The original frame building was moved across the street for $75.00 and was sold to the Nazarene congregation, which would later move the church again to its present location, two blocks east.

There were many reasons that the congregation found it necessary to construct a new church. Firstly, by having a structure made out of limestone and brick rather than wood, the structure would be better protected from fires. Secondly, it would provide much needed additional space for their religious activities. With the introduction of the railroad in the mid-1880s, the town experienced a boom. By 1880, Jewell County had become the "banner corn county in Kansas."⁶ Therefore, it became quite necessary to establish a church that could contain the growing size of the congregation.

The construction of the church provided for a two-story structure with a gabled roof and two towers. The tallest tower contained a bell, which is no longer in use. At 3,320 square feet, the new building was also much larger than the previous one and provided more room for the growing membership. According to a 1912 publication of the Burr Oak Herald, the new church included a sanctuary, a Sunday school room, a baptistery, a large basement, kitchen, furnace/coal room, and a study and reading room.⁷ The main sanctuary was arranged to seat about 225 people.

There were several contractors that submitted bids for the construction of the church, but the builder chosen was M. E. Brady from nearby Beloit, Kansas. J.C. Holland drafted the design of the church. Holland had already designed another building in the community, the Burr Oak School, right across the street.⁸ The total cost of construction of the church was $16,000.⁹

There were many different activities that the female members of the church coordinated in order to raise the money necessary for construction. Members featured in the popular drama, "The Last Lost," and the money raised from the admission receipts went to the church.¹⁰ The women also put together a cookbook to raise money as their donation to the building. The Willing Workers Sunday School Class arranged the cookbook. They visited area homes to secure the best recipes of the best cooks, which were arranged and assembled with the permission and names of the donors.¹¹

There were two ways that members of the church honored the contributions of the community. They donated historical effects for future generations to study, which were left inside of the church's cornerstone. The cornerstone ceremony involved placing a Bible, hymnal, subscription list, copy of the church charter, a history of the organization of the church, list of members, and a copy of the newspaper. These items were placed into the cornerstone at a ceremony on December 5, 1912.¹²

Additionally, many were commemorated on the memorial stained glass windows throughout the church. The contract for the stained glass windows was awarded to Ford Bros. Glass Co., from Minneapolis, Minnesota, which designed and manufactured art, stained, and ecclesiastical American and European Memorial windows. The price of the windows was $385.00 plus freight charges and guarantee of a safe delivery.¹³ There was some damage to the windows when they arrived, but this was soon replaced. There are three large windows that are enhanced with the effect of stained glass windows. There are within large window columns. The subjects within the windows are "Christ in the Garden," "Christ the Teacher," and "The Garden Angel." In the four flanking windows of the two larger windows is an emblem medallion.¹⁴

After the Great Depression and during the Second World War, the population of Jewell County met a swift decline, as did many rural Kansas communities. During the years between 1920 and 1940, the county population declined 4,270 people. The situation grew far worse just within a ten-year time span. Between 1940 and 1950, the county population declined another 1,272 people.¹⁵

From 1950 to 1953, the interior of the church was modernized. The changes were made to the altar and basement. In the basement, the kitchen was moved to a different location and it was modernized. A gas furnace was also installed as well as new carpeting. In 1998, an elevator was added with an outside entrance on the west elevation. Plexiglas was also installed to protect the stained glass windows from the weather. In 2005-2006, repairs were made to the tall bell tower and a new gas furnace was installed.

In 1977, the church joined the Jewell County Parish. The church currently has a small, but active membership of 20-25. The church is also used for community events including kindergarten classes, 4-H meetings, Bible studies, children's religious gatherings, funeral services, and wedding receptions. The building has been important part of the community for almost 100 years.

Architect

J.C. (James Clinton) Holland (1853-1919), the prominent Topeka architect, was employed to prepare plans, specifications, and details for the church. Holland specialized in public and quasi-public buildings, and designed many significant buildings throughout the state and region. He designed sixteen county courthouses, schools, churches, YMCAs, jails and commercial buildings.

Holland was born in Lima, Ohio, and received his education at Northwestern Ohio Normal University and the School of Architecture at Cornell University. Upon completion of his yearlong studies at Cornell University in 1882, Holland taught architecture in Kansas and other states. He also served as a member of the New York Society of Architects.

Holland served as state architect from 1895 until 1897, during which time the entire central wing of the capitol building, except the central dome, was completed. During these three years, he supervised the expenditure of nearly $750,000 in public buildings in Kansas.¹⁶ He then served the Atchison, Topeka, and Santa Fe Railway as "special architect" from 1897-1899. Upon leaving the position at the railway, he started his own firm of J.C. Holland and Son based in Topeka. It was during this time that he designed the Burr Oak United Methodist Church

Builder

M. E. Brady, a Beloit builder, was commissioned by church leaders of the United Methodist Church of Burr Oak to construct their new church. Brady and his crew were awarded a contract of $11,940.00 on February 26, 1912 for the project. Brady and his crew took a total of seven months to complete the project. While working on the project, he and his crew also built the city hall and a garage in Burr Oak.¹⁷

Richardsonian Romanesque Architecture

The Burr Oak United Methodist Church retains its historic architectural features, which include its stained glass windows, masonry exterior, stone accents, round-topped arches, and the asymmetrical façade of the building. Richardsonian architecture is closely associated with cities and city building especially in regards to the midwestern region in the early twentieth century. It became a symbol of the transforming landscape, of prosperity, confidence, and the desire of a sophisticated metropolitan appearance.¹⁸ Richardsonian design was readily adapted to numerous building types, yet it was typically more expensive to build than other Late Victorian styles that could be executed in wood. For this reason, they were mostly architect-designed landmark buildings.

Identifying features of Richardsonian Romanesque buildings are the round-topped arches occurring over the windows and doors, masonry walls, towers, and an asymmetrical façade. The windows of Richardsonian Romanesque buildings are usually deeply recessed in the masonry wall and they generally feature a single pane of glass per sash. These stylistic details can be found on the Burr Oak United Methodist Church.

Richardsonian Romanesque buildings in Kansas were often constructed with limestone that is native to the midwestern region. The usage of limestone in building soon acquired symbolic overtones and represented the permanence of prosperity of settlement. Therefore, landmarks of all types used the limestone including churches, hotels, stores, shops, schools, houses, banks, residences, and barns.¹⁹

Summary

The Burr Oak United Methodist Church (1912) is being nominated to the National Register of Historic Places for its architectural significance as an architect-designed Richardsonian Romanesque church. It is a fine example of early twentieth century architecture that is exceptional for a small rural Kansas town.
