G. HISTORICAL INFORMATION

Falun, in Saline County, Kansas, was settled by Swedish immigrants beginning in the late 1860s. Some of the Falun residents came directly from Sweden, while other arrived after having lived in Bishop Hill and Galva, Illinois. Falun was named after a city by the same name in the province of Dalarna, Sweden.

Swedes are predominantly Lutheran, and at first the area residents were members of Lutheran churches in the neighboring towns of Salemsborg, and Lindsborg, both Swedish communities. Falun at first had a “Christian Union Association,” a church with an ecumenical orientation, however, support for this church eventually declined.

A turning point in the history of Falun came in 1886, when the Union Pacific Railroad put rails through the township, and a station in the town. From that point onward, Falun’s economic base was secure.

It was in the following year that the residents of Falun decided that their numbers had grown sufficiently for them to establish and sustain their own church. The initial meetings for the establishment of a church were held in the Falun school house in October of that year, and the first order of business was to petition the Salemsborg and Lindsborg Lutheran churches to release from their rolls their members living in Falun.

The minutes from their church records indicate that progress toward establishing their new church advanced rapidly. Within just a few weeks of their first meeting, the congregation had purchased land and the church owned by the Falun Christian Union Association and physically moved that building to the newly purchased lot. As these arrangements were taking place, the leading members filed for, and received an incorporation charter for the Falun Swedish Evangelical Lutheran Church on November 16, 1887. Because the Falun church was started in the fall (after the harvest had been gathered and sold) fundraising progressed with equal success. Even though they had many expenses in starting a new church, paying these expenses did not pose a problem.

The first pastors for this new church were Rev. Carl A. Swenson, who would visit one Sunday a month, and Mr. Carl G. Norman, who was the regular pulpit supply. The first full-time minister was Rev. P. M. Sannquist, beginning in 1889. Rev. Sannquist died only three years later. Following his death, there were a few interim pastors who filled the church’s ministerial needs. The next fill-time, permanent ministers at FSELC was Dr. John Elholm. Dr. Elholm served for eleven years, a period of growth for the church. As membership grew, the church acquired a bell, the building was enlarged by 14 feet, a sacristy was installed as well as a new roof, and the interior redecorated.

In later years, the church built a parsonage. Later, the Ladies Aid Society purchased a church building (previously owned by the Baptists in Falun), and had it relocated next to the the FSELC, for the purpose of using it as social hall.

A phenomenon experienced at FSELC, as with all ethnically oriented churches, was the passing of the immigrant generation, and the succession its Americanized descendants. When the church was first organized and incorporated, the word Swedish was intentionally and conspicuously included in the name of the congregation. Church services were conducted in Swedish and church records were also recorded in that language. However, it was inevitable that the children and grandchildren of the Swedish immigrants would learn and use English as their primary language. At the annual meeting in 1927, the congregation decided to remove the word Swedish from their corporate name. By January of 1929, they membership decided to conduct services in Swedish only one Sunday per month, and seven years later, services were conducted entirely in English.
The next long-serving pastor was Dr. Ernst F. Pihlblad, who came to Falun in July of 1927. Dr. Pihlblad ministered to FELC during some of its most difficult years. Falun and its economy have always been based on agriculture, and the “Dirty Thirties” were years of hardship for the farmers of the area. Not only were they having difficulties in making ends meet, but were also finding it difficult providing financial support for their church. As the FELC had to dramatically reduce its expenses, it disbursed its salaried organist, relying on volunteers instead. When before, the FELC was able to meet its obligations to the Conference and the Synod, it was not able to do so for a period of a year and a half.

The next event to influence Falun and its Lutheran Church was World War II. Not only were Falun’s young men drafted into the military, but the U.S. Army built Camp Phillips, a training facility to the north and east of Falun. Even after World War II, the presence of this camp was felt for decades.

In the years following WWII, the church grew through a number of building and renovation projects. During the tenure of Pastor J. E. Liljedahl, the FELC added a building addition, installed a new heating plant, a new organ, and new chimes. In the mid 1960s the church social hall, bought and moved to FELC by the Ladies Aid Society, was replaced by a new structure. Soon afterwards, the old parish house was demolished and a new one built in its place. These building projects were followed by the installation of new sidewalks and landscaping. By the early 1970s, the FELC had installed new air conditioning and new pcws.

Though the the 1960s and ‘70s were years of growth and renovation, the biggest change to take place was the establishment of a dual Parish system in conjunction with the Salemsborg Lutheran Church. A Joint Study Committee (compiled by members from both churches) examined the proposal and set the guidelines that would make a dual system operational. The committee extended a call to Ronald H. Olson, subject to ordination. Olson accepted the call on May 11, 1970, and was ordained on June 14.

Later in the 1970s, the FELC went through another round of renovations, this time in preparation for the church’s 90th anniversary in 1977. Improvements included a newer furnace, a remodeled sacristy and study, new entrance doors, a lighted bulletin board and church sign, and a memorial stone at the original church site at the cemetery.

5 SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTES

In examining the three cubic feet of records of this collection in context of a broad picture, church records offer a view of a community from its spiritual side. Papers such as these indicate what people valued, what they believed, and in part, how they conducted their lives. They provide a record of who lived in Falun between 1887 and 1995, and where they put their allegiance. They also indicate where the people of Falun came from, what their ethnicity was, what language they spoke, and the degree of homogeniety of the community’s members.

This collection is arranged into ten different series, some of which are divided into subseries. The records found within this collection reflect the functions, activities and duties of the church, its staff and its members. These activities include recording church membership (births of members’ children, receiving new members, confirmation of children, marriages, and deaths & funerals), annual business meetings, church council minutes, financial records, the cemetery register, records of organizations within the church (men’s and women’s clubs), choir financial records, and Sunday school attendance and offerings.

Because this church was established by Swedish immigrants, it should come as no surprise that many of its earliest records were written in Swedish. Records written in Swedish are noted in the Detailed Description of the Collection. The first two volumes of Annual Business Meeting minutes are in Swedish, however an English translation of those two volumes follows them in this microfilm.

Most of the records in this collection are in the form of blank record or ledger books with handwritten information inside (for example, the columns in a record book would list names, date of birth, date of baptism, date of confirmation, date of marriage, etc.), or are minutes of meetings, (either handwritten, or typed) or are financial ledgers. This is the predominant format of this collection.

In the early years of the FSELC, the “Annual Business Meetings” were actually held a number of times during a year. It was not until 1895 that the annual meetings were truly once-a-year events. It may have been that the volumes labeled Annual Business Meeting Minutes doubled as minutes of the Church Council. The minute books of the Church Council begin in 1927, the year after the last of the Annual Business Meeting Minutes in Swedish. The Annual Business Meeting minutes for 1927-1989 (the fourth volume in that series) also contains the Incorporation Charter from the State of Kansas (1932), a copy of the Constitution for Congregations of the Augustana Evangelical Lutheran Church 1955-56, and a copy of the Approved Constitution for Congregations of the Lutheran Church in America (1962) under the front cover.

The first of the women’s organizations within the FSELC was the Falun Ladies Aid, sometimes identified as the Falun Ladies Aid and Missionary Society. The women’s church organizations within the church contributed greatly toward its needs. It was the women’s club that acquired the first social hall for the church. During World War I, the FLA worked as an extension of the Red Cross, and prepared bandages for American servicemen. At the November 3, 1958 meeting, the FLA voted to change their group name to the Augustana Lutheran Church Women, a change which came into effect as of the February 12, 1959 meeting. Two other subgroups formed under the auspices of the LCW: the Esther Unit and the Priscilla Unit. The first records listed for all of these groups are their minutes, followed by financial ledgers for both the Ladies Aid and the LCW.

There are chronological gaps in some series in this collection. The earliest Church Council minutes begin in 1927. Any Council minutes preceding this volume are no longer extant. The Luther League also has gaps in its timeline. The first volume of minutes ends in 1892, and the next existing volume begins in 1906. While that one ends in 1911, the following book begins in 1927.

While some record series are incomplete, others are continuous, even through organizational changes. When the Lutheran Church Women changed to become the Falun Ladies Aid, its minutes continued without a break. The financial ledgers for both of these organizations also continue uninterrupted.

The last two series record the receipts and expenditures of the choir and Sunday schools. The Sunday school superintendent’s ledgers, 1919-1963, also include attendance rolls.
