DESCRIPTION

The Cheyenne County Courthouse is a Classical Revival style,\(^1\) four-story masonry structure that occupies the south portion of a full square block to the east of the Cheyenne, Kansas historic central business district [Figure 1: City Plan of St. Francis, Kansas]. The courthouse shares the block with a playground and a small portable shed located north of the courthouse. Located to the west of the courthouse is street parking. The courthouse is rectangular in plan and measures 100 feet wide by 84 feet deep by 35 feet high [Figure 2: Existing Site Plan]. Its primary elevation faces south onto Washington Street. The symmetrical structure has a buff colored brick wall surface and a dressed limestone raised foundation. The design also incorporates limestone window sills, and a limestone belt course, entry pavilion, cornice and parapet. The courthouse has a flat roof. The decorative parapet screens the fourth-floor jail. Except for the window sash and exterior door replacements, this property retains a high degree of its original architectural integrity and retains nearly all of its original character-defining exterior and interior features [Photographs #2 and #3]. Erected in 1924 as a county courthouse, the structure continues to serve as a county courthouse.

The building has nine bays on the north and south façades and five bays on the east and west façades [Photographs #2 and #3]. The exterior is smooth, buff colored brick laid in running bond with dressed limestone detailing. Brick soldier coursing accents the window lintels, and dressed limestone highlights the foundation, belt course, and second- and third-floor window sills. Dressed limestone also defines the decorative masonry features such as the entrance pavilion, arched door heads, decorative keystones, cornice, and parapet balustrade [Photograph #1].

New paired and tripartite, metal-clad sash windows with transom panels replaced the original paired and tripartite, one-over-one light, wood frame sashes with glazed transoms [Figure 3: c.1970 Photograph of Courthouse Showing Original Windows and Doors]. Sliding, single-glazed sashes now compose the majority of the paired window configurations. Various other sash configurations such as paired, one-over-one light sashes and tripartite, one-over-one light sashes with randomly inserted panels characterize the remaining windows [Photographs #2 and #3].

The primary façade features a slightly projecting pavilion with six quarter-engaged Tuscan columns on pedestals supporting a plain entablature inscribed with “Cheyenne County.” Positioned between the four central columns are single doors with semi-circular door heads and ornamental keystones. Metal frame doors with sidelights replace the original wood doors, and opaque transom panels replace original glazed transoms [Figure 3: c.1970 Photograph of Courthouse Showing Original Windows and Doors]. A grand staircase, flanked with decorative torches [Photograph #4], rises from the ground level to an intermediate level between the ground and first floors. A limestone clock encasement, which has had its timepiece removed, rests upon the entablature along the parapet balustrade [Photograph #1].

The floor plan and use of the courthouse are typical of the majority of Kansas courthouses built during the same period. A grand staircase at the south side of the building and a smaller side staircase at the west side of the building provide access to the ground floor and the second floor. Each floor has a main east-west corridor. The ground floor has a grade-level entrance and a new handicapped accessible entrance on the west façade.

\(^1\) Also called Neo-Classical Revival
[Photograph #3]. The first floor houses the county clerk, register of deeds, and county commissioner offices. The second floor houses a courtroom, judge’s chambers, jury room, and sheriff’s office. The third floor, which is screened from exterior view by the decorative parapet balustrade, houses jail cells and storage rooms [Figures 4-7: Existing Floor Plans].

The interior finishes are also typical of the majority of Kansas courthouses built during the same period. Interior finishes consist of mosaic floor tiles, plaster walls and ceilings, oak doors and trim, marble stair treads and risers, and decorative iron balustrades at the staircases [Photographs #5, #6, #7, #8 and #9]. Original light fixtures and sconces also remain intact [Photographs #10 and #11].

The Cheyenne County Courthouse retains a high degree of architectural integrity. While metal-clad windows and doors replace the original wood frame windows and doors, the overall exterior appearance is not compromised as the remaining exterior features, such as the masonry, projecting pavilion, Tuscan columns, and roofline, are intact. All of the interior features of public spaces such as the mosaic floor tiles, plaster walls and ceilings, oak doors and trim, marble stair treads and risers, light fixtures, and decorative iron staircase balustrades are also intact. The floor plan of each floor is intact as well. Overall, the Cheyenne County Courthouse not only has excellent architectural integrity, it is also in excellent condition as a result of the care and attention given to the maintenance of the structure by a succession of county commissioners.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Cheyenne County Courthouse, erected in 1924–1925, is historically significant under National Register Criterion A in the area of POLITICS/GOVERNMENT and under Criterion C in the area of ARCHITECTURE for its associations with the development of county courthouses in Kansas and with Thomas W. Williamson, an influential Kansas architect who designed and supervised the construction of a number of Kansas county courthouses in the early twentieth century. The historic significance of the Cheyenne County Courthouse is based on its associations with the history and development of Kansas county courthouses that is documented in the Multiple Property Form, "Historic County Courthouses of Kansas." In particular, the property has direct associations to the historic contexts established in the Multiple Property Form—"The Role of the County Courthouse in Kansas Communities 1856–1956," "Twentieth Century Kansas County Courthouses and Their Changing Use: 1900–1956," and the "Architecture of Kansas Courthouses 1861–1956." The property’s association with the evolution of Kansas County Courthouses and their design dates to its construction in 1924–1925 and continues to 2000, the arbitrary 50-year cutoff date for determining eligibility of National Register properties. The property reflects typical courthouse plans, siting, and restrained Classical Revival style designs found in Kansas after the end of World War I and before the onset of the Great Depression. In addition to its ability to physically convey associations with these contexts, this property enjoys a high degree of integrity and is a representative example of its property type. It exemplifies the work of a master courthouse architect noted for his Kansas courthouse designs. The property type and larger historic contexts relating to the significance of the Cheyenne County Courthouse are fully documented in the Multiple Property Form. The following commentary expands upon these larger contextual themes as they specifically relate to the Cheyenne County Courthouse and documents the property’s significance.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND AND SIGNIFICANCE

Located in the extreme northwest corner of Kansas, with Colorado to the immediate west and Nebraska to the immediate north, Cheyenne County has two incorporated towns (St. Francis and Bird City) and one unincorporated town (Wheeler). Highway 36 runs east and west through the middle of the county and State Road 27 jogs diagonally north and south. The majority of the county’s residents live in St. Francis and Bird City.1

Organized in 1886 with the creation of the Board of Commissioners appointed by the Governor of Kansas, the board consisted of three men: J. M. Ketcham, W.W. McKay and J. F. Murray. Their first responsibility was the establishment of three voting precincts for the May 15, 1886 election that filled the county’s first positions of county clerk, treasurer, probate judge, attorney, clerk of district court, register of deeds, sheriff, superintendent of public instruction, surveyor, coroner, and three new commissioners.

The history of Cheyenne County reflects turbulent beginnings. The lure of inexpensive land brought the earliest Anglo-European settlers who were primarily of Germanic and Russian cultures, many of whom settled areas further east in Kansas before making their way to Cheyenne County. As late as the 1890s, inhabitants of Cheyenne County suffered from famine and drought. In March and April of 1895, the county purchased oats, wheat, millet, corn seed, barley, sorghum seed, and potatoes to be distributed for planting. They also distributed carloads of coal, clothing and food to the needy. These early inhabitants survived and prevailed at establishing thriving towns that were linked through a network of roads and bridges.

The county first operated out of a building in Bird City leased from D.W. Cave, Benjamin Bird, and Charles I. Kerndt for $75 a month. In July 1888, the Board of Commissioners purchased the building for $2,827.50. The use of this building proved to be temporary. In February 1889, voters moved the county seat to St. Francis where a new courthouse was to be constructed. By October 1889, a new 40-by-60-foot, two-story, wood, frame, Italianate style structure opened for occupancy. No longer extant, the building stood where the band shell now stands in the park east of the present courthouse.²

In 1924, the county erected the current Classical Revival style courthouse at a cost of $163,921. The architectural firm of Thomas W. Williamson and Company designed the courthouse and the construction firm of Thomas D. Howard erected the courthouse. With the exception of the replacement of original window sashes and casements, and the installation of a handicapped accessible entrance, the building appears much the same as when it was first constructed in 1924.³

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE
The Cheyenne County Courthouse is a significant under Criterion A for its associations with the second and third generation courthouses erected in a wave of new courthouse construction that occurred in the early twentieth century in Kansas. These buildings replaced aged and obsolete courthouse buildings erected in the state’s earlier settlement period. Its location on a Courthouse Square is representative of one of the typical practices of locating county courthouses in Kansas on open space in the center of commercial areas.

ARCHITECTURAL SIGNIFICANCE
The Cheyenne County Courthouse is significant under Criterion C as an example of the Kansas county courthouses designed by Thomas W. Williamson. Williamson, who practiced architecture for 50 years beginning in 1912, is noted for the design of his public buildings.⁴ His large body of work is important as a reflection of the transitional period between the revival of classical or renaissance forms and the advent of the Modern Movement in public architecture in Kansas. The Cheyenne County Courthouse is one of 23 extant Classical Revival style courthouses built in Kansas after the end of World War I and the onset of the Great Depression. It is one of four courthouses in the State designed by the firm between 1917 and 1928. As a late example of his use of the style, this property conveys information about the progression of his use of the design idiom.

³ Author Unknown, Handwritten Notes. Kansas State Historical Society, Cultural Resources Division, Vertical Files.
⁴ The career and work of Thomas W. Williamson is documented in the Multiple Property Form.
Williamson's courthouses are typically Classical Revival in style and feature buff brick or limestone masonry highlighted with limestone foundations, symmetrically placed columns at the primary façades, flat roofs and decorative parapet balustrades. Two of Williamson's four Kansas courthouses, including the Cheyenne County Courthouse, also display limestone clock encasements at the parapet wall above the primary entrance [Figure 8: Representative Examples of Kansas Courthouses Designed by Williamson]. The Cheyenne County Courthouse retains these exterior features and serves as a representative example of Williamson's Classical Revival style courthouses.

The Cheyenne County Courthouse is also architecturally significant for its retention of its original floor plan configuration and hierarchy of space, both of which are typical of many early twentieth century Kansas courthouses. Kansas courthouses of this period are generally defined by three or four floors, which have a hierarchy of functions that are located off a main corridor and accessed by one or more staircases. The ground floor is either at grade level or slightly sunken and houses the auxiliary functions such as the boiler room, facility manager's offices, toilets and storage. The finishes of this floor are often not as elaborate as the upper, more public floors. The first floor, which is the most highly utilized floor, is generally elevated from grade level and approached via an exterior grand staircase. The first floor houses offices frequently utilized by the public such as the county clerk, register of deeds, county treasurer, engineer, appraiser, and county commissioners' offices. The second floor houses the courtroom, judge's office, jury room, and the sheriff and court clerk's offices. The courtroom is nearly always on the opposite side of the primary entrance, facing the central grand staircase, and is 1½ or two stories in height. The third floor is typically not as obvious from the exterior and is occasionally part of the roofline. The third floor historically housed the jail, although many new sheriff and jail annexes replace those functions leaving space to expand in the original courthouse. The Cheyenne County Courthouse retains this hierarchy of space and the ground floor through third floor configurations, including the jail on the third floor, which is screened by a decorative parapet balustrade.
