Description: The Kyne House is a 1½ story stone residence with a side gabled roof. There is a flank gable over the entrance. The quoins and lintels have been painted white, the foundation stones on the west and south have been painted red. The roofing is now asbestos shingle; metal storm windows, the front porch and a frame structure attached to the rear are also modern additions. The roof trim does not appear to be original. The inscription: "HANS J. JORGENSON" is inscribed in the stone on the east wall.

Significance:

The Kyne House is in shape and general aspect a Victorian cottage of the type popular in America during the 1860s, 1870s, and 1880s.
