Tilley House
Ness Co., Kansas

Description

This single-story, limestone house in Ransom, Kansas was built by the local stonemason Henry Tilley in 1898. The home is a four-room house common to that time and was built of locally quarried limestone. The original block of the house was topped by a decked roof and featured an off-centered chimney. Smooth cut and rough-cut limestone blocks were skillfully laid to create a quoining effect at the corners of the house and around the openings on the front façade. All mortar joints feature a beaded joint.

The front façade is oriented to the south and has three main openings. A centrally placed front door is framed by a small entry porch and features expertly carved spindles and support posts. The front door itself is a wooden door that features an etched glass panel. Originally the porch roof was decked with decorative shingles. But the current porch has a composite shingle roof that extends down from the main roof.

To the left of the front door is a pair of original double-hung, one-over-one, wood windows set into a single, oversized opening. To the right of the front door is a single, double-hung original wood window. Both window openings feature a decoratively stone carved lintels. The date of construction, 1898, is carved in a stone between the front porch and the right-hand window, just under the eave of the main roof.

The original structure was modified around 1912 with the addition of a wing on the east side. Henry Tilley added this wing using the same type of stone he used for the construction of the house. He did not continue the quoining pattern to the same degree, only using decorative stone on the corners. The east-wing contains a kitchen, and bathroom. It is topped by a side gabled, single-ridge roof, which extends down over a wrap-around porch. The chimney originally stood at the east end of the roof but was removed with the addition of the east wing. The porch begins at the southeast corner of the main block and wraps around the east end of the wing. The porch terminates at the northeast corner of the wing where the entrance to a small stone cellar is located in a shed addition. This porch features spindle work similar to the small front porch. When the east wing was built, a door was opened at the southeast corner of the original house to allow access to the porch from the dining room. The south side of the east wing features one, double-hung wood window. The east end of the wing has another door and one wood window to its north. These appear to be original to the time of the wing's construction.

The rear of the house faces the north and is very simple and utilitarian. Various shed additions have been added over the years, but are built of the same limestone used in the original house and east wing. One of these shed additions currently functions as the utility room. A large cistern is intact beneath the floor. Another addition was constructed at an unknown date on the north side of the original house. This addition is visible in a 1912 photograph and may have been built at the same time as the east wing or may have been original to the house. The north addition is very small with an interior dimension of 9'x9'. It is believed to have originally served as a bedroom. The north addition is topped with a single ridge roof that extends out from the rest of the house. The majority of the stone used on the back of the house is rough hewn with the exception of the stone in the gable of the north addition.

The exterior of the Tilley House retains a great deal of its historic character and integrity. Few changes have taken place since the early part of the 20th century. These changes include the removal of chimneys, painting of the exterior stone, and a slight reconfiguration of the roof. The decked hip of the main block was modified to regular hipped roof with a short, central ridge. The small entry porch roof was also modified to remove the flat, decked portion and the roof over the porch on the east wing was made slightly steeper.

The interior of the Tilley House has also maintained a high degree of integrity, though modern finishes have obscured some features. The interior of the house features original woodwork found in the windows, window frames, doorframes, baseboards, and floors. The doorframes and woodwork in the kitchen and bathroom has been painted. Several of the bedrooms have had carpet placed over the hardwood floors. The door and window surrounds are all decorated with molding and corner blocks that vary from a bull's eye to a wild flower pattern. The window ledges are very wide due to the thickness of the stone walls and are covered with beadboard.

The interiors of the walls are plaster over the rough hewn stone. The ceilings are also plaster but have been dropped some from their original height. The solid stonewalls prohibit any electrical or mechanical systems being run through the walls, so everything has been run down from the ceiling. While these wires and outlets detract from the general look inside the house, they have not irreparably damaged any of the historic materials. Very few interior modifications have taken place since the original construction and overall, the house retains a great deal of its historical integrity.

Statement of Significance

Summary

The Henry Tilley house in Ransom, Ness County, Kansas, is being nominated to the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion C. The Tilley house was built in 1898 by Henry Tilley a stonemason who lived and worked in Ness County. Henry Tilley quarried the stone himself and built the home as a residence for his family in their later years. The Tilley house is an example of a limestone Vernacular home constructed around the turn of the century.

History

Henry Tilley was born in Ware, Somerset, England, on July 26, 1844. He immigrated with his family to Iowa in 1857. It is recorded that he joined the Iowa Cavalry in 1863 and was honorably discharged in 1865. After his two years in the Cavalry, Henry returned to Pocahontas County, Iowa, where he homesteaded 160 acres. In 1866 Henry married Isabel Hancher. And in 1873 he and Isabel, with their two children, moved to Ness County, Kansas. Henry learned the trades of stone cutting and masonry from his father, Mathew Tilley.

In 1879 Henry Tilley bought a quarter section near the town site of Schoharie in Ness County, Kansas. Schoharie was an early community in Ness County, consisting mainly of a post office and a school. The post office existed only between 1881 and 1889. Henry's father and mother came from Iowa and bought a portion of Henry's land and Henry helped his father build a house there. The Walnut Valley Times on September 20, 1879 reported, "Mr. Mathew Tilley has his splendid mansion on River Street newly enclosed. Go that way and see what Henry and his father can do and if you want a fancy job you will know you can find a workman that can do it." The house featured a rose design on the gable end and the date 1879. It is believed that Henry also built a house on his land during this time. Page 214 of Minnie Millbrook's Ness, Western County, Kansas, shows the "home of early day settler, Henry Tilley" as a modest, stone structure. In 1881 both Mathew Tilley and Henry Tilley sold their land and their houses to Moses Langellier, and the families returned to Iowa.

According to his declaration for pension, submitted in 1912, Henry returned to Kansas for one year in 1884 before returning to Iowa again in 1885. However, he may have returned between 1885 and 1887 as he is cited as the builder of several other stone buildings in Ness County during those years. Letters written from both Henry and Isabel to Isabel's mother in Iowa and also letters from Isabel to Henry describe the tough times the family was experiencing during these moves. Henry was a farmer and a stonemason, but it was difficult to earn a living in the slow economy of that newly settled part of Kansas. Henry and Isabel had five children in all. It is not known if Isabel and the children accompanied Henry on all of these moves between Iowa and Kansas. Henry was definitely settled in Ness County, Kansas, by 1897. The family moved to Ransom, in Ness County in that year and lived there till Henry died in 1915.

Henry Tilley had his own stone quarry southwest of Ransom and he used that stone to build several stone buildings in the business district of Ransom. These included two banks, the S & D Mercantile (1900), and the Scherzinger Mercantile. These buildings composed nearly the entire west side of the business district of late 19th century Ransom, Kansas. Henry Tilley also built the Ransom Grade School (1902) and the Christian Church (1904). Unfortunately, the Tilley House is the only remaining example of his work left in Ransom.

Elsewhere in Ness County, Henry built the "Lion Block" on the town square of Ness City in 1887. He also built the New York House near Schoharie townsite. The limestone New York House was originally built in 1881 as the home of Levi M. Bice but also served as a hotel, store, and post office. Henry Tilley also enlarged a stone stable for Bice. He also built the Benjamin VanVolkenburg home near Schoharie in 1890.

An interesting comment on Henry Tilley's skill as a mason can be found on pages 246-247 of Minnie Millbrook's account in Ness, Western County, Kansas. "Ness County first displayed its products at a Western Kansas fair held in October 1886 at Garden City with exhibits from fourteen other counties. The Ness display, which won first prize of a silk banner and $150 in cash...consisted of a stone house built of four different kinds of building stone, which abound in the county. The words 'Ness County' were neatly cut in the stone over the door, the whole structure being the work of Henry Tilley of Schoharie. The whole exhibit required seven teams to haul it to Garden City."

Henry and Isabel lived in the Tilley House at 108 West 2nd in Ransom from the date it was built in 1898 until their deaths. Henry died in 1915 and Isabel in 1933. Their daughter, Kate, lived in the house until the 1950s. A photo of the house from 1910 or 1912 shows the house looking very much as it does today. The Tilley House is a significant structure as an example of the limestone construction practices of western Kansas, but also for its association with the skilled craftsman of that stone, Henry Tilley.
