Morton Albaugh House
Topeka, Kansas

Description

The Morton Albaugh House, located at 1331 Harrison Street in Topeka, Kansas, is a two-story American Foursquare with a hipped, asphalt-shingled roof and hipped dormers. The house is clapboard clad on the first floor; the second-floor exterior is shingled. Brackets accent the cornice line under the wide eaves of the main roof and the dormers. The window and door surrounds exhibit the simple style that is a hallmark of the American Foursquare.

The front, east-facing facade is symmetrically arranged. The front door is flanked on each side by a large window centered between two narrow two-over-two windows whose top sash glazing features a leaded glass quartered diamond surrounded by an oval. The large windows' smaller top sashes are decorated with leaded glass arranged in a crossed diamond pattern. The full-width, one story porch that shelters the front entrance features wrought-iron supports standing on stone-capped brick pillars; the distances between these supports are spanned by wrought-iron railings. Four poured-concrete steps, curving graciously outward as they descend, lead to the front porch.

The second story is punctuated by a small, centrally positioned window underscored by a wide wooden lintel that is supported by a bracket. A large one-over-one window is located on either side of this center window. The attic dormer is fenestrated by a ribbon of four single-pane windows.

The south-facing elevation features a brick chimney. On either side of this chimney, a one-over-one window positioned between two half-length single pane windows provides illumination to the ground floor. A bay window with decorative leaded glass also punctuates this level of the house. The second floor receives light through two single one-over-one windows, a pair of casement windows, and a single one-over-one window. The attic dormer features a ribbon of three windows.

A latticework enclosure shields the ground floor entrance on the north end of the rear, west-facing elevation, while a staircase provides access to the enclosed porch on the second floor. The south end of the west elevation features a ribbon of four windows fenestrating the lower story and a single window providing illumination to the upper floor. The hipped-roof attic dormer has two windows.

The north elevation exhibits a variety of fenestrations. Four small square windows punctuate the basement level. The ground floor features a ribbon of three small square windows, a door that is no longer in use, a one-over-one window, and a center one-over-one window between two adjoining, narrow one-over-one windows.

The second-floor fenestration is comprised of a single one-over-one window, a grouping of one center one-over-one window bounded on either side by a narrow one-over-one window, a small one-over-one window, and a second single one-over-one window. The attic dormer is characterized by a ribbon of three windows.

The interior of the house retains the original charm and dignity of its craftsman design. Throughout the house, original dark wood moldings surround the windows. The dining room is entered through a colonnade and features a beamed ceiling. The living room is graced by a pair of arched French doors and a large arched dark wood panel, and features a brick fireplace with dark wood mantel. The parlor is entered through large, functioning pocket doors. The kitchen retains its vintage cast-iron sink, and features two pantries. A restroom is located between the kitchen and the dining room.

The upper floors of the house are accessible via two sets of stairs. The first is visible from the foyer and retains its elegant woodwork. The second opens to the kitchen. The second floor has painted woodwork and carpeting. Three bedrooms and a bath fill the front portion of the second floor. The bedroom in the northeast corner has been divided into two parts by a temporary partition. A second kitchen and an enclosed porch are located in the rear of the house’s second floor. The third floor of the house is a storage area.

The property on which the Morton Albaugh House sits also includes garage of recent construction. This garage, a non-contributing feature, is a one story structure with a shed roof and synthetic siding. A walk-through door on the east facade provides access to the garage.

Statement of Significance

The Morton Albaugh House (c. 1910) is historically significant under Criterion B for its association with Morton Albaugh (1862-1918), an important figure in late 19th and early 20th century Kansas politics. The house is also significant under Criterion C as an example of the American Foursquare.

Morton Albaugh rose to statewide prominence in the 1880s as an astute political organizer for the Kansas Republican party, and remained an important figure in Kansas politics until his death in 1918. In the course of his career, he managed three gubernatorial campaigns and was the chairman of the Kansas Republican state central committee for six years. He also served as state bank commissioner and was appointed to the post of clerk of the United States district court in Topeka.

Historical background and significance:

Morton Albaugh was born in Shoals, Indiana, on February 10, 1862, to Samuel and Mary Albaugh. He was educated at the Southwestern Normal College in Mitchell, Indiana, and as a young man taught five terms of school. In the early 1880s, Albaugh came to Kansas to serve as the principal of the Kingman, Kansas, public schools. After two years at this post, he got his start as both a newspaperman and a politician when he moved to Saratoga, Kansas, and launched the Saratoga Sun. Using his newspaper as a tool for boosterism, Albaugh avidly backed Saratoga against the town of Pratt in the fight for the county seat of Pratt county. The two communities became embroiled in a bitter struggle for the title which, according to a September 28, 1910, article in the Topeka Journal, involved “gunplay, queer elections, [and] bad language...” In the end, Saratoga, which had grown to a population of nearly 2,000, lost the title, and shortly thereafter faded away.

Soon after Saratoga’s defeat, Albaugh gave up the Saratoga Sun. He returned to Kingman, Kansas, and purchased the Kingman Leader, and eventually the Kingman Courier as well. He combined the papers into the Kingman Leader-Courier. It was here that Morton Albaugh began his rise to political power. When the Republican party in Kansas recognized a need for a representative organization in Kingman, Albaugh stepped up to create it. His efforts in this endeavor were so notable that in 1888, Albaugh was elected chairman of the Republican state central committee. In all, he served on the committee for eighteen years, and was its chairman for an unprecedented three terms. In 1895, Albaugh was appointed to the State Board of Charities by Governor E. N. Morrill, whose election campaign he had supported. It was around this time that he moved his family to Topeka.

Morton Albaugh and Eula L. Houghton of Loogootee, Indiana, were married on September 28, 1890. They had two children, Houghton and Kathryn. Eula came to be well known in Topeka's social circles as a talented pianist. She wrote and performed original piano compositions, and was a charter member of the Music Study Club. She often held recitals at 1331 Harrison Street. When the family moved to Topeka, they first made their home at 1024 Harrison Street. On October 18, 1909, a building permit for the house at 1331 Harrison Street was issued to Morton Albaugh. The cost of the house was $5360, and by July 1910, the Albaugh family had moved into their new home.

The American Foursquare plan that the Albaughhs chose, which had come out of the Prairie School of architecture, was extremely popular at the time the house was constructed. In The Field Guide to American Houses, the McAlesters characterize the “hipped roof, symmetrical, with front entry” subtype, of which the Morton Albaugh House is an example, as “the earliest Prairie form [which] developed into the most common vernacular version.”

The American Foursquare is an indigenous domestic design that was built in cities, suburbs, and the countryside between 1900-1925. Foursquares were popularized by speculative developers, plan book designers, and mail order houses. Mail order catalogues such as Radford, Sears, Ward, and Alladin all offered variants of the Foursquare plan. Like the bungalow, the Foursquare offered a reliable, affordable, well-planned house for the burgeoning American middle class.

In its simplest form the Foursquare is a two-story house with the same four-room floorplan on each floor. The cube form is surmounted by a hipped roof which may be pierced with dormers on all four slopes or only on the front. Deep overhanging eaves accentuated with large brackets define the Foursquare. A front porch spans the entire facade, supported by classically styled pillars or columns. Frame, narrow clapboard sheathing is the most common treatment for Foursquares but brick and stone examples are also found.

Foursquares are adaptable and can wear the stylistic attributes of the Colonial Revival, Prairie, Mission, Craftsman, and Italian Renaissance styles. Elegant window, porch, and roof treatments serve to distinguish an otherwise straightforward domicile. Palladian windows, pantile roofs, multi-paned upper sashes, double-hung windows, beltcourses, and elaborate beveled-glass front doors were all components of an upscale Foursquare interpretation.

The Foursquare was meant to offer the appearance of massiveness and stability. Massiveness was achieved through shape and reinforced by heavy rooflines and eaves. Additional mass could be gained by adding additional porch columns or using thick pillars in their stead. A popular, pervasive, yet understated building type, the Foursquare continues to actively house families throughout the state.

That the Albaughs chose to construct their new home on the 1300 block of Harrison Street marked them as members of Topeka’s elite society. At the time, the most fashionable street of all was Topeka Boulevard, located one block west of Harrison Street. A building boom in the 1890s and early 1900s pushed the growing upper middle class neighborhood outward to encompass adjacent streets as well. Just a few blocks south of the State Capitol, the Albaughs’ neighborhood was one of newly built, fashionable Foursquares inhabited by the families of successful business owners, railroad agents, and physicians. In the succeeding years, this neighborhood and its fine homes have suffered a reversal in fortune. While some homes were destroyed by the tornado that wrecked havoc on Topeka in 1966, many others have fallen prey to neglect and the wrecking ball. Many of the gracious homes that once stood along Topeka Boulevard have given way to the commercial strip. A parking lot stands on the site of 1024 Harrison Street, Albaugh’s first Topeka home. 1331 Harrison Street is one of the few homes in the area which still conveys a sense of the prestigious neighborhood of which it was once a part.

Morton Albaugh’s most notable accomplishment, according to political observers of the time, was in organizing the 1898 campaign which pushed the Populist governor and representatives out of power and returned Republicans to these offices. Although this election has been retrospectively characterized by historians as “a dull affair between a dispirited Populist organization and a slate of lackluster Republicans” (Peterson, 252.), Albaugh’s contemporaries praised his renowned ability to transform acquaintances into supporters and then to organize those supporters into effective political blocks. One summed up his influence this way: “Mr. Albaugh’s fame rests chiefly upon his unerring political instinct and his genius for organization.”

In 1901, Morton Albaugh received a reward for his efforts on behalf of Governor W. E. Stanley’s election campaign in his appointment as the State Bank Commissioner, a post he served until 1904.
In 1902, he fell down the steps of the State House and broke his leg. Unwavering in his devotion to the Kansas Republican party, Albaugh managed Willis J. Bailey’s successful bid for governor from his bed. In 1904, Judge John C. Pollock named Albaugh to the clerkship of the United States District Court in Topeka, a position that he held until his death in 1918.

In addition to his work in politics, Morton Albaugh never forgot his early interest in education, and used his influence to lobby for funding on behalf of the University of Kansas and other state educational institutions. He also distinguished himself during World War I as the head of the Shawnee County Red Cross. William Allen White remembered that “[Morton Albaugh] was instructed to raise $8,000. He raised $25,000.” He also served on YMCA and Liberty Bond drives.

Morton Albaugh’s unexpected death from pneumonia at his home at 1331 Harrison Street resulted in an outpouring of public recognition and tributes from prominent Kansans. The Topeka State Journal reported the “Home of Dead Political Leader Jammed This Morning,” as scores of Topekans and political dignitaries, including supreme court justices and former governors, visited 1331 Harrison Street where Albaugh’s body lay in state. During his funeral, in honor of the man one journalist had dubbed “the master mechanic of the old machine,” the state house closed for an hour. William Allen White, who despite their sometimes divergent views on political issues had been Albaugh’s longtime friend, eulogized him in the Topeka Daily State Journal.

After Eula Albaugh’s death in 1947, the house changed hands several times. Later owners converted the second floor into an apartment and added a kitchen on that floor. Despite these changes, the Morton Albaugh House has retained the charm and dignity that made it worthy of the family of one of Topeka’s most prominent citizens. Although Morton Albaugh never sought elected office himself, his tireless effort on behalf of the Republican party in Kansas at the turn of the twentieth century was influential in determining the course of Kansas politics.
