The Potwin Place Historic District is an area which derives its distinctive identity from the layout of Greenwood and Woodlawn Avenues, from the deep setback of the residences which line these streets, and from the design character of the buildings themselves.

Both Greenwood and Woodlawn Avenues are wide arteries that run north from Willow to Grove. Where they meet these two termini and where they intersect the three arteries that run through the area from west to east (West First, West Second, and West Third streets) are situated small circular parks around which vehicular traffic must flow. In contrast, the surrounding residential neighborhoods adhere to a simple grid arrangement of streets.

Originally dirt thoroughfares, both avenues were subsequently paved with bricks. Only Woodlawn retains its brick surface as Greenwood's has been asphalted. Brick sidewalks are also found on many blocks in Potwin Place. Many of the curbs in the area are formed with limestone blocks. Also unlike the situation in surrounding neighborhoods is the relatively deep setback enjoyed by most of the residences facing on Greenwood and Woodlawn Avenues (cf photo #44 with photo # 29). To a large degree this has resulted from the relatively generous proportions of the original lots here. Even when divided in half, as has occurred throughout the area, these lots are large in comparison to those occupied by residences on neighboring streets.

The residences in Potwin Place are distinguished from those in surrounding areas by virtue of design character. Unusual for Topeka is the high percentage of 19th century designs which survive along the two main avenues of the district. These are generally two or two and one-half story frame structures with multiple roof gables, varied massing that emphasizes offset projections, and large one story verandahs. It is difficult to assign stylistic designations to these buildings. Much of the detailing is Queen Anne in character--fishscale shingles in the gables, turned posts and balusters, windows with panes of stained glass along the borders--while Shingle Style-inspired features such as pent gables, grouped windows and curved or bowed shingled surfaces are also evident. But regardless of detailing, these residences are predominantly large front gable forms with subsidiary extensions flanking or skirting them. They are, very simply, late Victorian suburban residences.

Some of the very first residences built in Potwin Place (cf photos # 2, # 10, # 11) were clearly Italianate in character, a reflection of mid-Victorian tastes for designs that had clear associational reference to a period or place. But most of the buildings constructed in the area during the 19th century evidence an attraction to the vaguer images of domesticity and commodiousness that belonged to the mid-century's concept of the farmhouse and that in the later decades of the century became an important ideal in Queen Anne and Shingle Style designs.

Early twentieth century development in Potwin Place is evident in large two or two and one-half story frame residences that also possess large front porches. The massing of these is more contained than is that of the 19th century structures and in the palladian windows or columnar supports of the porches is an evident taste for classicism--either colonial revival or beaux-arts in sentiment. In the replacement of many 19th century verandahs with the classicized porches of the early 20th century is apparent both the influence of later tastes on the earlier developments and the compatibility of early 20th century classicisms with the formal restraint of the late 19th century designs to be found in Potwin Place.

Complementing these early 20th century front-gable structures are residences evidencing the influence of Prairie School designs. 400 Greenwood (photo # 40) is very much an extrapolation of designs such as the Robie House, but residences such as the Margotte Residence (438 Woodlawn--photo # 1) represent the more common response to the Prairie School evident in Potwin Place—a two and one-half story box-shaped structure whose hipped roof, deep eaves and horizontal proportions share formal affinities with the school's work. The period's taste for classicism is also evident in the details of these designs—i.e., columnar porch supports and classical moldings.

Potwin Place also contains a number of residences dating to the 1920s and 1930s. These evidence a more academic approach to design in the way they mimic historic precedent rather than simply embracing the general spirit or selected details of classical or colonial examples. While these designs, which in Potwin Place are primarily based on colonial prototypes (cf photo # 35), retain the same general scale and amplitude of their older neighbors, they bespeak the social changes which had taken place by this period—e.g. smaller families required slightly smaller accommodations, and a greater desire for privacy made a large front porch undesirable and encouraged the use of rear patios or screened side porches.

What makes the buildings of Potwin Place Historic District a distinctive collection of residences is not simply that there are the above-mentioned types of designs here, but that they are as a totality a harmonious mixture of 19th century and early 20th century designs because of continuities in scale and form that reflect continuities of conditions and taste. Although bound together by distinctive street layout and setback, these structures would in any event sit apart in character from those in the surrounding neighborhoods because of their larger scale, because of the variety of historic periods represented and because of the dominant presence of 19th century elements. In surrounding neighborhoods the development has occurred primarily since the turn-of-the-century and is of small scale and modest character.

Individual descriptions of the properties located within the Potwin Place Historic District are listed below. These descriptions contain an evaluation of each property's historic integrity. Ratings range from excellent down to below-average. The "excellent" category indicates few changes have been made, "above-average" means that the changes have been historic ones or that only minor modern alterations have occurred, "average" indicates that the property's historic character is still dominant but that alterations have significantly marred its character, and finally, "below-average" means that the property's historic character is evident but not dominant. Changes in roofing material have not been taken into consideration unless especially evident visually.

The photographs selected provide a cross-section of the types of properties and street scenes to be found in Potwin Place Historic District. Many of these date from March of 1976. Before utilizing these, Historic Preservation Department staff checked to make certain that the photograph accurately depicted the current appearance of the property.

BOUNDARY JUSTIFICATION:

The boundaries selected for the Potwin Place Historic District are ones that identify the portions of Potwin Place that continue today to clearly evidence the dominant historical expression of the area as a prestigious 19th century suburb in dialogue with, and modified by, early 20th century development of similar pretensions but based on different tastes and concerns. Likewise, the properties that have been identified as non-contributing elements are ones that fail to contribute to this historical expression either because they are modern or because their own historical character lacks sufficient meaningful relationship to the other properties in the district to play a role in creating the district's distinctive historic image.

Accordingly, the district's boundaries essentially encompass only the boundaries of the properties which face on Woodlawn or Greenwood Avenues. While six properties, five adorning the lots which round the northeast corner of Willow and Elmwood, and one which faces north on Grove just west of the district, were historically a part of the 19th century Potwin Place development, the historic integrity of these properties is insufficiently complete to enable them to act as clear gateways to the district. While many of the properties within the historic district boundaries have no better integrity in absolute terms, these properties enjoy greater proximity to the properties which set the historical tone of the district, (i.e., those having excellent or above average historic integrity) and thus can be clearly related to them. This encourages recognition of the characteristics they possess which contribute to the historic character of the district. As the six excluded properties cited do not enjoy this relationship to properties of greater historic integrity, they must be able to express on their own the dominant character of the district if they are to be considered important parts of it. This they are unable to do--impeccable historic integrity would be necessary to pull them into the district.

The Stormont-Vail property (332 Greenwood) is also excluded from the boundaries of the district. Historically this property has always been associated with the Stormont Hospital (now Stormont-Vail Hospital), but the building which survives on the lot today fails except by general association to convey this historical fact. The original Stormont Hospital buildings have all been destroyed with only this 1920s structure remaining, used today only for dormitory purposes. The surviving property registers as a visual intrusion into the district by reason of incompatible scale and design character.

The properties which front on West First, West Second, and West Third streets and the two properties facing south on Willow between Greenwood and Woodlawn are by virtue of scale, physical orientation, and, in many cases, character, collectively elements that do not contribute to the district's distinctive historic image. While subdividing lots occurred in Potwin Place from the beginnings of its development, and in four instances already cited 19th century buildings were constructed facing on Grove and Willow, 19th century development was largely confined to Woodlawn and Greenwood. All the properties oriented to the cross streets, therefore, are 20th century developments which do not visually take up any dialogue with the 19th century buildings. As this dialogue is a crucial aspect of the district's historic class, areas developed in the early 20th century which do not possess this image of dialogue with the 19th century Potwin Place do not visually read as part of it. Along West First and West Second streets, moreover, the design character and scale of the properties is quite different from the contributing 20th century development along Woodlawn and Greenwood.
Like the non-contributing properties there, these are largely one and one-half story bungalows or one story modern designs that have little to do with the dominant historic theme of the district. While several of the bungalows have sufficient historic integrity to make them recognizable expressions of distinctive historic circumstances and design values, their modest character in both scale and detail is contrary to the dominant theme in Potwin Place, both during the 19th and 20th centuries, of residential development that reflects wealth. With these buildings modesty is clearly not an affectation.

SPECIFIC DATES

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Through its physical features Potwin Place Historic District clearly evidences a distinctive aspect of suburban development in Topeka, Kansas, during the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

Charles Wolcott Potwin, a banker from Zanesville, Ohio, purchased 70 acres of land located west of Topeka from S.K. Cross in 1869. This purchase was one of many land deals that Potwin was involved with in Kansas at this time.

It was not until 1882 that Potwin platted out the 70 acres into 80 lots each 122½ feet wide and 205 feet deep. These lined two wide (100 foot) avenues running north and south, Woodlawn and Greenwood, and were divided into blocks by three narrower (50 foot) east-west arteries called Ashland, Park and Laurel Avenues. Thoroughfares running east-west formed boundaries at north and south. Lots also lined an 80 foot street, Elmwood Avenue, which ran along the addition's west edge. The area was called Potwin Place.

At the intersections of the avenues, circular parks were laid out, a treatment which departed from the usual grid street arrangement of most additions in and around Topeka at this time. Reportedly, two hundred elms were also planted along Woodlawn and Greenwood, perhaps to give some credence to the leafy allusions of the street names.

In the autumn of 1885 the lots in Potwin Place became available for purchase. Potwin exercised considerable control over their disposition in an evident attempt to attract a prosperous clientele by creating an atmosphere of exclusiveness. No lot was sold unless the purchaser agreed that the house would be constructed within six months and that it would cost at least $2000 to build. Moreover, Potwin withheld the deed to the property until construction began, probably as a measure to both avoid speculation and create a secure image of growth as a means of attracting other buyers.

Six houses were built during the autumn of 1885 at an average cost of $5000. The first house to be constructed was that at 337 Woodlawn (photo # 11), a venture of Potwin's to set the tone for future development.

It was common practice for purchasers of lots to sell off half the lot as a site for another residence. Possibly Potwin had initially contemplated larger scale development occurring in the area. Yet, early residents of the area were an assortment of lawyers (e.g., Mr. Loomis of 433 Woodlawn; Mr. Murray of 125 Woodlawn; Mr. Troutman of 131 Greenwood; Mr. Gleed of 304 Greenwood), businessmen (e.g., Mr. Crane, banker, of 412 Greenwood; Mr. Henderson, banker, of 124 Greenwood; Mr. Fish, importer, of 41 Greenwood; Mr. Forbes, real estate agent, of 328 Woodlawn), politicians (e.g., Mr. Wilson of 105 Greenwood) and other professional types able to afford commodious dwellings.

Many of the houses were built by developers. Operating in the area with some frequency were Kitchell & Marburg, Martin Gobrecht, Mahlon Updike, Milton Council and Henry S. Allen. Allen was responsible for two and possibly all three of the Italianate residences built on Woodlawn at 338, 337 and 421 (photos #10, #11, and #2). Council, Marburg, Kitchell, Updike and Allen also owned homes of their own in Potwin Place. The designs of the new residences were probably based on patterns widely available through handbooks published in the period by such men as Bicknell and Palliser. (see General Description)

By the end of 1888 the Topeka Capital reported that not one of the houses that had been built had cost only the minimum figure. Most had represented an investment of considerably more. Potwin's scheme to create a prestigious suburb seemed to have proven successful. On January 1, 1889, the Capital noted that the population of Potwin Place was "increasing rapidly both from immigration and natural causes, and wealth keeping pace with the new arrivals; bright, progressive, prosperous Potwin."

On June 4, 1888, Potwin Place was incorporated as the City of Potwin Place along with another small tract. This action took place as the city of Topeka developed plans to annex a large area of suburban territory, including Potwin Place, that had been growing up around the city. As Potwin Place was a prosperous area, resentment over the incorporation ran high on the part of citizens who felt that the Potwinites were making their money in the city but not spending it there as well.

With its own utilities and a streetcar line making convenient runs into the city, it was felt that Potwin Place enjoyed "all the advantages and none of the disadvantages of a metropolis."

In 1890, Potwin Place annexed some neighboring suburban additions, though ultimately, in 1899, it succumbed itself to annexation by Topeka. It continued to develop as a prosperous neighborhood during the early decades of the twentieth century. During this period, adjacent developments filled up with inexpensive bungalows and in some cases further divisions of Potwin Place lots afforded sites for this type of housing, but these fronted primarily on the east-west avenues.

Currently, residents of Potwin Place Historic District operate an active neighborhood association which is highly involved with efforts to maintain the distinctive historic character of the neighborhood. Historic preservation-minded rehabilitation activities are evident. The neighborhood association initiated this nomination.

(The statements made here reflect current understanding of the facts concerning this district's historic character and may be subject to amendment.)

10. VERBAL BOUNDARY DESCRIPTION

Potwin Place Historic District is bounded by Willow street on the south, beginning at the alley one-half block east of Greenwood. The boundary runs west on Willow to the alley one-half block west of Woodlawn. From that point it runs north four blocks to Grove and then east to the alley one-half block east of Greenwood. The boundary then runs south down the alley to the beginning point on Willow, with the exception of the south approximately 230 feet of the block bounded on the north by West Second and on the south by West Third. That area is excluded from the district.
