Narrative Description

Summary

The Welborn Community Congregational Church is located at 5217 Leavenworth Road in Kansas City, Wyandotte County, Kansas. The church sits atop a pitched grade and is the central feature of an approximately one-acre lot shaded by a mix of mature deciduous and coniferous trees. The building consists of two separate but connected masses differentiated by form and use. The primary sanctuary space occupies the western portion and is characterized by irregular massing and traditional architectural features. The classroom addition to the east, while also faced in stone, exhibits a modern rectangular form and fenestration. Interiors reflect a generally modern aesthetic of wood paneling, tiled ceilings and floors and streamlined lighting. Two smaller single-family residential properties flank the church. The residence on the west side was historically associated with the church serving as a parsonage, but it is now under separate ownership and has lost its historic integrity. The circa 1930 bungalow residence on the east is currently owned by the church, but is not historically associated with the church. It is classified as non-contributing.

Elaboration

The Welborn Community Congregational Church is centered on a hillside plot located along a medium-density corridor of mostly mid-century buildings. A pitched drive is flanked at the entrance by two historic, splayed stone retaining walls and runs along the western edge of the building and connects to a parking lot on the rear (south) portion. Two residential buildings flank the church, the former rectory on the west and a historically unrelated building to the east. The landscape is characterized by a mix of mature hardwoods and softwoods and a simple, manicured lawn. An historic concrete staircase and sidewalk lead to the street side entrance and a sturdy, squared stone message sign sits between drive and stairs.

The church consists of two related but distinct parts. After a fire destroyed nearly all of the original building, construction of the main church structure began in 1936 and was finished in 1941. This portion contains the sanctuary and vestry and is characterized by an irregular rectangular plan, gabled roofs, masonry cladding and subtle references to Collegiate Gothic Revival architectural features. A 1959 addition adjoins the main church structure on the east and contains classrooms, offices and a parlor. This portion is defined by a rectangular plan, flat roof, brick and masonry cladding and characteristically modern fenestration and wall planes, though an attempt was made to engage the earlier structure by using masonry cladding on the primary (north) façade.

The main church is an irregular rectangular plan with the long dimension running east/west. The grade of the land is such that the basement level is visible and fenestrated only on the north (primary, street-facing façade). The interior volume is supported by a double-pitch roof with a high gable over the center nave and full-length shed extensions along both sides of the long dimension. Small, gabled transepts extend from the main space, punctuating the west end of shed extensions. A prominent, heavily massed, two-story tower extends from the north façade and serves as a formal entrance accessed by a heavy masonry stairwell with concrete coping and treads over a masonry core. The tower has a flat roof, stepped parapet, stepped vertical wall plane and a large arched entry opening. A modest, Georgian-inspired steeple is centered over the high gable. Fenestration is generally four-over-four wood sash situated within deep masonry openings. Main level fenestration on primary façade has arched window openings. Cladding is masonry in ashlar-pattern.

With the exception of its stone facing, the 1959 addition is a utilitarian structure typical of its era. The two-story structure extends to the east in an orderly sequence of geometric massing, flat roof and symmetrical rows of large, aluminum, hopper-style windows separated by metal and cast stone spandrels. The primary north façade is clad in ashlar stone to match the main church while the east and south façade has brick cladding. The east façade is faced with red brick and contains a centered, vertical window band marking the interior stairwell. Two vertically-oriented, ten-light sash are divided by spandrels of metal and cast stone. The staggered south façade of the 1959 addition is red brick and contains numerous vertical openings of varied size housing varied configurations of sash. The 1959 addition's fenestration is generally characterized by centered hopper-style windows with fixed lights above and below a single operable unit.

Interior

The interior of the church consists of the foyer, parlor, pastor & secretary offices, main sanctuary, Sunday school classrooms, nursery and restrooms. One enters the church through the south doors from the parking lot. To the left is the sanctuary and to the right the parlor. Just past the parlor on the right is the entrance hallway to the chapel, classroom, nursery and restrooms. Materials and finishes, including the sanctuary, are of a modern aesthetic and include carpet, wood paneling and wainscoting along with streamlined light fixtures.

Upon entering the sanctuary, you are facing west and on the west wall is a large picture of Christ painted specifically for the Welborn Community Church by John Vale, Sr. There are pews to the right and left of the main aisle. On either side of the pews are additional aisles as well as additional pews to the right and left of the side aisles. There are stained glass windows on the north and south sides of the sanctuary. All pews and beams are made of solid oak. The vaulted ceiling has acoustical tile.

At the north end of the foyer is a War Memorial for church members and their family. To the left is an entrance from the north (or front of the church). A staircase goes down to the basement or up to the sanctuary and an additional staircase up to the sanctuary balcony, which is not occupied or used at this time.

The 1959 addition is accessed through the church foyer and contains two-stories with double-loaded corridors in a very basic, functional plan. Floors and ceilings are tiled and interior walls are constructed of painted concrete masonry units. Classrooms, offices and restrooms are located off corridors.

Integrity

The building exhibits two distinct architectural periods: the late 1930s section exhibits subtle elements the Collegiate Gothic, with its masonry construction and multi-light windows; the 1959 Modern addition, with its horizontal emphasis, was constructed during a period of rapid development in this part of Kansas City. The Collegiate Gothic influences are primarily found on the building's exterior. The interior of the earlier part of the church exhibits many Modern features, which suggests that interior changes were made at the time the education wing was constructed. These mid-century interior changes do not appear to have involved significant modification of the floorplan, but rather more cosmetic modifications, such as lighting, trim, and perhaps finishes. The building retains integrity from the period of significance, which is 1936-1959.

8. Statement of Significance

Applicable National Register Criteria

(Mark "x" in one or more boxes for the criteria qualifying the property for National Register listing)

- A Property is associated with events that have made a significant contribution to the broad patterns of our history.
- B Property is associated with the lives of persons significant in our past.
- C Property embodies the distinctive characteristics of a type, period, or method of construction or represents the work of a master, or possesses high artistic values, or represents a significant and distinguishable entity whose components lack individual distinction.
- D Property has yielded, or is likely to yield, information important in prehistory or history.

Criteria Considerations

(Mark "x" in all the boxes that apply)

Property is:

- A Owned by a religious institution or used for religious purposes.
- B removed from its original location.
- C a birthplace or grave.
- D a cemetery.
- E a reconstructed building, object, or structure.
- F a commemorative property.
- G less than 50 years old or achieving significance within the past 50 years.

Period of Significance (justification)

The period of significance begins with the building's construction in 1936 (after a fire destroyed nearly all of the previous building) and ends in 1959 with the addition of a Modern education wing.

Criteria Considerations (justification)

Welborn Community Congregational Church meets the registration requirements for Criteria Consideration A: Religious Properties because it derives its primary significance from its architecture and association with the development of the community. The property does not derive its primary significance from associations with religious doctrine.

Narrative Statement of Significance

Summary

The Welborn Community Congregational Church was built in two phases during the mid-20th century. The church sanctuary is housed in a late 1930s Collegiate Gothic-style building designed by Kansas City architect Ernest O. Brostrom at the end of his career. A Modern-style education wing designed by architect Raymond Meyn was added onto the east side of the church in 1959. The church congregation was established in 1874, which constructed its first house of worship on this same location in 1882. This building is nominated to the Register of Historic Kansas Places for its architecture and its association with the development of the Welborn neighborhood of Kansas City, Kansas. Today, the church is known as the Welborn Community United Church of Christ.

Elaboration

Wyandotte County was organized in 1859, and the community of Welborn is named after early resident Jacob B. Welborn, who platted the area and served as the first school superintendent. The settlement traces its roots back to the Civil War era when the Six-Mile House operated along this stage route between Independence, Missouri and Fort Leavenworth.¹ It was named for its location six miles west of the Wyandotte ferry by the road.² Six-Mile House and its proprietors – J. A. and Theodore Bartles – were frequently caught up in the cross-border violence during the Civil War period. After the war, the area around Six-Mile “was quite a business center,” with “a church, school house, blacksmith shop, a store, a hotel, and a tobacco factory.”³ The site across the street from the nominated church has long been the location of a public school – beginning with Six-Mile School in the mid-19th century. Today, there is an early 20th century school building across the street.

The Wyandotte Forest Congregational Church organized in 1874 and worshippers met in the Six-Mile schoolhouse until it was destroyed by fire in 1878.⁴ The Rev. Joseph Mason, a missionary, led the worshippers who numbered thirteen. The congregation purchased an acre of ground in 1882 from D.R. Emmons and W.H. Ryus and began construction of their first building, which was built of wood and measured 24 feet x 40 feet.⁵ At the time of the building’s dedication on December 10, 1882, there were forty members in the congregation. The name of the church changed to the Welborn Community Congregational Church in 1918. The building was remodeled and expanded in 1922. A basement – known as Mason Hall – and classrooms were added to the east side of the building in 1925.

The church suffered a tremendous fire in the early morning of May 5, 1936, losing nearly the entire building. Once the flames were extinguished, only parts of the Mason Hall and classroom wing had survived. The Kansas City Kansan reported that the fire broke out in the basement and “worked its way up thru the floor and partitions.” The auditorium was “badly gutted” and “part of the floor with the pews collapsed into the basement.”⁶ Firemen had estimated the damage as between $3,000 and $4,000.

Plans were developed to rebuild the church at the site. Although research has uncovered no architectural plans, two secondary sources suggest Kansas City architect Ernest O. Brostrom was involved in the design of the church.⁷ Brostrom was known throughout the region for his designs of churches. Within a few years of establishing his professional office in 1912, he published a book entitled Churches, in which he provided building plans and advice to congregations considering a building project. According to historian Larry Hancks, Brostrom was an admirer of Louis Sullivan and Frank Lloyd Wright, and his commissions reflected these influences. Many of his church designs were Gothic, Classical, and Tudor styles that included Arts and Crafts elements. Brostrom was nearing the end of his career in the late 1930s when he worked with the Welborn Community Congregational Church, and by this time he had left his long-time office in the Reliance Building and worked out of his home.⁸ His level of involvement in the Welborn church construction is not known, but he was noted in the newspaper as attending the building dedication in July 1941.⁹

As the building was being rebuilt, church services were held across the street at the Welborn school. A cornerstone ceremony was held March 28, 1937 on Easter Sunday. The newspaper reported 200 people in attendance. It also reported that the new church would "be of Gothic style architecture, modernized to meet present day needs" for an estimated cost of $15,000.¹⁰ One newspaper article notes the involvement of local builder Otto Junker.¹¹ Labor was donated and money was raised by subscription, loans, and grants from the Congregational Church Building Society. The church committee overseeing the building project included Mrs. A.A. Caraway; O. O. Myers; Ed Schlenker; O.J. Prichard; R. E. Beggs; Mrs. G.L. Lewis; P.V. Kibbey, and A.N. Rober.

Although the building was not complete, it was consecrated in April 1938, services were held in the social hall of the new building, and fundraising continued. The building was largely complete in July 1941 when it was dedicated, but pews were not installed until 1945 as a result of a gift from the building society. The parking lot along south of the church was completed in 1948. In all, the cost of the new church reached $35,000.

Discussion of a new classroom addition began in May 1955, and a fundraising drive began the following July. Plans were drawn up by architect Raymond Meyn,¹² which he compiled from ideas submitted by Rev. Kenneth Martin and representatives of various church departments. The plans called for the removal of the 1925 Mason Hall and classroom wing on the east side of the church and replacing it with a new two-story rectangular wing with a Modern design. The congregation voted to accept the plans in September 1957, and a ground-breaking ceremony was held in September 1958.

The addition contains eight classrooms, a nursery, a kitchen, a parlor with a fireplace, an office, a pastor's study and restrooms. The exterior finish is matching rock on the street side facing north (Leavenworth Road) and buff brick facing on the south and east. Labor was donated and again money was raised by subscription and the Board of Home Missions, plus bank loans. This addition was dedicated in September of 1959.

In 1957 the church merged with the Evangelical & Reform Church to become the United Church of Christ. In 1961 the name of Welborn Community Congregational Church was formally changed to the Welborn Community United Church of Christ.

Architecture

Ernest O. Brostrom (1888-1969) was a respected Kansas City architect known especially for his church designs. He had no formal training in the field of architecture, and he began his career in 1907 as a draftsman with the Eisentraut-Colby-Pottenger Company, Architects, in Souix City, Iowa. Brostrom came to Kansas City that same year to help the firm establish another office. At 23 years old, he established his own office in Kansas City. According to historian Larry Hancks, Brostrom's "earliest known independent design" was the Swedish Evangelical Mission Church in 1912 at 1501 West 42nd Street.¹³ In 1919, Brostrom published the book Churches, which offered advice and design ideas to religious congregations considering building projects. His designs reflected traditional styles including the Gothic, Classical, and Tudor revivals, but also popular styles of the day such as Prairie. In his book, Brostrom stressed "the [church] building should express its purpose in its exterior form and structure; impressing the feeling 'this is an Holy Place'; should lend assistance in the efficient administration of the educational work; providing proper facilities for the social life and community service; in a sentence should embody all that will make for an ideal and practical structure."¹⁴ Brostrom's work with the Welborn Community Congregational Church came during the economic depression of the 1930s and near the end of his professional career, with only two other commissions attributed to Brostrom after this church.¹⁵ The Welborn church reflects less ornate architecture with than was typically found on Brostrom's other churches.

As Brostrom transitioned into retirement, a young architect trained at the University of Kansas in the early 1930s was beginning his career in Kansas City. Beginning in the mid-1930s, he worked in the office of Kansas City architect Joseph Radotinsky and later partnered with Radotinsky and Fred Deardorff in 1957.¹⁶ Radotinsky and this successor firm were known for their designs of schools, which may explain why Welborn Community Congregational Church sought Meyn's guidance on the design of a new educational wing in the late 1950s. Similar to public schools of the mid-20th century, the design of the educational wing emphasized plan and function rather than architectural distinction. Nonetheless, this addition features a horizontal profile with an orderly sequence of geometric massing and is simply ornamented to reflect the influence of the Modern Movement.
